

I feel the need, the need for tweed

Description

Of late, Tweed has become rather cool – you see everyone from David Gandy to Guy Ritchie wearing it and hit TV shows like Peaky Blinders have lent it a roguish edge. Its commute from aristocratic country wear to the streets of Florence and Soho is well deserved. Tweed is a very interesting and adaptable cloth indeed.

Take Harris Tweed for example – you can only make it if you live on an island in the outer Hebrides and have a weaving shed attached to your croft. The result is a highly original and individual cloth – no two pieces are the same.

Harris is probably the most famous name in tweed but there are many other makers whose swatches display a surprisingly wide range of weaves and colours. There's even a tweed for cyclists that has built in reflective qualities.

Tailors' tweed swatches

Tweed lends itself to personalisation in other ways too – arm patches, patch pockets, velvet collars, chunky buttons. For a more conservative look, a black or dark blue tweed will serve you well in the chillier months.

Do you feel the need for tweed? Book an appointment with Chris here.

Category

1. Fabric
2. Sports Jackets
3. Tweed

Tags

1. bespoke tailor
2. Chris Kerr

Date

2025/07/19

Author

ross-furlong

default watermark